The long term goal of the proposed research is to understand the function of the serine proteases plasmin and trypsin. In particular, we have chosen to study the effect of these serine proteases on cells of the nervous system. Microbacterium leprae is the causative agent of leprosy, a disease affecting a million people worldwide. Since leprosy affects primarily the nerve cells, the microbacterium finds easy access to these cells and is able to multiply in the cytoplasm of these cells. Our finding, that the leprosy bacillus releases, by its cytoplasmic products, the serine proteases plasmin and trypsin, indicates that these proteases are able to act directly on the nerve cells. In this proposal, we plan to study the effect of these serine proteases on different types of nerve cells. In preliminary experiments we have shown that addition of plasmin to neuronal cultures results in the death of the cells in culture. The specific aims of this
